

The Tooth Fairy Is Complimentary

6 ways hotels and cruise lines are taking family-friendly amenities to absurd levels

Bicuspid-Specific Coddling

What happens when little Olivia loses a tooth and you don't have any spare pesos? Leave it to the on-call "Tooth Fairy" at Cancún's Panama Jack Resort who will leave her a letter of congratulations along with a hand-carved turtle. panamajackresorts.com

Infant-Gear Curation

Forgot the diaper bag? At Chicago's Kimpton Hotel Palomar, summon the "Baby Butler," who will stock your room with diapers, wipes, sound machines, and high-tech baby gear. He won't change a nappy for you, but he might take out the trash. hotelpalomar-chicago.com

On-Call Knife Assistance

Doling out hospitality in bite-size pieces, Disney Cruise Line will arrange for a crew member to cut up your child's food for the duration of the voyage so you can enjoy your own food for once. disney-cruise.com

OTT Party Throwing

Skip the drama of planning a first birthday party for your babe—the concierge at Grand

Velas Riviera Nayarit, an all-inclusive resort on Mexico's Pacific coast, will handle everything when you book the Mi Primer Fiesta Experience. Package highlights: a haircut and foot massage for the little one, piñatas, baby food purées, a Mexican cake and mini foam party. Sure, your little angel will never remember this, but you will. $893 for the party, vallarta.grandvelas.com

Goodnight Moon, Hello, Bourbon

Nighttime doesn't have to be a nightmare. The "Bedtime Butler" at the Kimpton RiverPlace, in Portland, Ore., delivers bedtime treats to your room including chocolate chip cookies, hot cocoa, bath toys, storybooks and—for parents only—complimentary bourbon pours. riverplacehotel.com

Etiquette Coaching

When Liam won't stop using his fork and knife like a savage, let the pros at the Ritz-Carlton St. Thomas's Club Lounge take over. They'll teach kids ages 5 and up table manners and help them gracefully fill their plates. ritzcarlton.com/stthomas

—Kelsey Ogletree

JAMES NIEHUES (SKIING MAPS); JAMES GULLIVER HANCOCK (FAMILY TRAVEL, AIRLINE FOOD)

